De Lorenzo Hair

With Signet’s safety products, De Lorenzo has stayed injury free and upheld rigorous quality management systems in distribution and manufacturing.

De Lorenzo Hair has been a proudly family-owned Australian company for over 35 years. With two generations of expertise in the haircare industry, the De Lorenzo family remains committed to Australian-made products and supporting local manufacturing.

Signet’s ISO-rated safety products are integral to operations at De Lorenzo’s Silverwater site, which manages the manufacturing and distribution of approximately 50 tonnes of product each week. These products are then supplied to professional salons and selected wholesalers across the country.

De Lorenzo’s partnership with Signet dates back over 25 years when the company sought a reliable supplier – one that could consistently provide products meeting Australian safety standards.

To ensure workplace safety, De Lorenzo sources 3M Respirators from Signet to protect against hazards and contamination in their manufacturing and laboratory areas.

For more demanding tasks involving machinery, Ansell Hyflex Gloves offer the grip, dexterity, and laceration protection required.

“The Ansell Hyflex Gloves are used by our packers and manufacturing staff because they provide the comfort, safety, grip, and durability required.”

– Kamil Fajloun, DLH Production and Maintenance Leader.

These two PPE products from Signet play a crucial role in preventing lost-time injuries (LTIs) – workplace incidents that result in lost productive hours.

“Protecting the people in our distribution and manufacturing teams while maintaining quality management is important to us. We are proud to be one-year LTI-free and know we can source the PPE we need to maintain these results from Signet.”

De Lorenzo’s operations adhere to ISO 9001 and GMP standards, ensuring rigorous quality management protocols are in place. This includes ongoing safety initiatives, incident tracking, and strict adherence to injury prevention measures – such as wearing the appropriate PPE.

“Our ISO and GMP certifications require our workers to not only wear safety gear of the highest Australian standards, but it has to be the right fit and provide the correct level of protection for the job. We know we can always get what we need from Signet.”

Signet stocks a comprehensive range of ISO-rated safety supplies from some of the world’s leading brands, helping businesses like De Lorenzo maintain the highest safety and quality standards.

Signet is proud to support De Lorenzo Hair and over 60,000 other Aussie ventures.

SAFETY GLOVES GUIDE

UNDERSTANDING EN SAFETY GLOVE STANDARDS

The European standard EN 388 outlines the requirements, testing methods, and labelling for safety gloves against mechanical risks. These methods also apply to arm protectors and other parts of protective clothing. Safety gloves are classified by performance levels for each mechanical hazard, rated from 0 to 5 (with 4/5 being the highest). The relevant ratings are displayed next to the glove's pictogram.

EN 388 MECHANICAL RISK RATINGS & TEST METHODS

Symbol	Rating
Abrasion	1-4
Blade Cut (Coup Test)	1-5
Tear	1-4
Puncture	1-4
Cut (TDM Test ISO 13997)	A-F
Impact Protection	P, F, X

Protection against mechanical hazards is represented by a pictogram with six symbols – four numbers (performance levels) and two letters. Higher numbers indicate more protection. An "X" in place of a number or letter means the performance metric was not tested.

Pictogram Symbols:

1. Abrasion Resistance: Tested by treating the glove with sandpaper under pressure. The number of cycles to create a hole is the benchmark. (Highest level 4 = 8,000 cycles).
2. Blade Cut Resistance (Coupe Test): Assessed using a rotating circular blade. The resulting index compares the glove to a reference material. (Highest level 5 = index 20)
3. Tear Resistance: Measured by slitting the material and determining the force required to tear it. (Highest level 4 = 75 Newtons)
4. Puncture Resistance: Evaluated by puncturing the glove with a nail and measuring the force used. (Highest level 4 = 150 Newtons)
5. Cut Resistance (TDM Test ISO 13997): Used for gloves where the cut material dulls the knife. The protection level is given in Newtons, based on the force needed for a cut of 20mm. (Highest level F = 30 Newtons)
6. Impact Protection: If the glove provides impact protection, it is marked with a "P" as the sixth symbol; if absent, no impact protection is claimed.

RESPIRATOR GUIDE

RESPIRATOR SAFETY & EDUCATION

Breathe cleanly and easily by selecting the right type of respirator and ensuring it fits properly. No matter how effective your respirator is, it cannot filter out hazards it wasn't designed to handle.

PROTECT YOURSELF AGAINST:

Dangerous Gas and Vapours

There is no one type of filter that provides protection from all contaminants. However, some filters may give combined protection against several contaminants such as particles and gases. The AS/NZS 1716 classification system identifies the different types of gas and vapour contaminants captured by respiratory safety equipment.

Contaminant	Symbol
Organic Vapours (boiling point > 65°C)	A
Organic Vapours (boiling point < 65°C)	AX
Inorganic Gases	B
Acid Gases	E
Ammonia	K
Mercury	Hg
Organic Compounds, low vapour pressure	G

Hazardous Dusts or Fibres

Particulate filters protect only against solid and liquid particles, including microorganisms, and do not guard against gas vapours like solvent vapour. They are classified as P1, P2 or P3, with P3 offering the highest level of protection.

Disposable P1 and P2 particulate filters come in standard (cupped) or flat fold designs, varying only by personal fit preference. Both options can include valves, which enhance ventilation and reduce heat buildup, making them more comfortable for long-term use.

3M P2 Respirator with Valve, Item No. 45105

THE IMPORTANCE OF FIT TESTING

The main factor in reduced respiratory protection is a poor fit. All respirators – whether disposable, half-face, full-face, powdered or air-fed – must achieve a proper seal against the wearer's face to function properly. A fit test is always necessary to comply with AS/NZS 1715:2009.
